TOP SECRET

Mr. Dillon. It was ad hoc.

remember him being there or saying anything. All I remember is the location, and the fact that the subject came up, and the fact that there were a number of people there -- I don't remember who they were -- and the fact that the CIA people, whoever they were, were negative to any such action.

Senator Hart. Would you be able to characterize the nature of the CIA opposition? Was it vehement, violent, casual?

Mr. Dillon. No. It was just more or less silent, and "there is nothing we can do." It wasn't moral.

Mr. Baron. About how many people were in attendance?

Senator Hart. There was no policy objection?

Mr. Dillon. I would say five or six, because I saw them sitting around the desk, I would say five or six, or it could have been seven or eight, no more.

Mr. Dillon. It wasn't stated in that way. It was just saying, no, it is not a possible thing.

Mr. Baron. Was this the meeting of any official body?

Mr. Baron. You mentioned on the phone to me that rather than a moral objection, as you have just said, it might have been

Mr. Dillon. No, I don't think so. It was not a note-taking type of meeting. It was not sitting around the table with somebody as the Chairman.

TOP SECRET

Senator Hart. It was ad hoc, in other words?
