refuses to comprehend or does not realize the huge potential of this relationship. To prove impervious to low-key advice that scandal could ensue and that the full exploitation by Castro would be foregone conclusion.

4. Above inventory of major defects in AMROD probably incomplete and partly based on hearsay and derived from partly prejudiced sources. Some manifestations of disarray may merely be concomitant of organizational shakiness and an overall lack of management. Others may be more serious and entail loss of moral perspective. Our intent is to preclude open Cuban propensity to fractionalism. In final analysis we could probably justify the Agency input as long as AMROD-1 remains professional Bloc. Reconstruction of viable rests solely on success inside Cuba; however, is remote prospect, especially if to conclude that targets are not virtually suited to all the immediate, short-term operations. Once field op continues to prosper as long as we are permitted to render intel support on its present level.
